Call for papers

The organizing committee for the 2020 Thessaloniki International Summer Academy on Media, will initiate a colloquium/one day international conference on 28th of August 2020. We invite proposals regarding "New Trends in Media and Journalism" with a special emphasis upon this year theme "Global Media models and emerging technology trends - AI, VR, Verification". Proposals that will be accepted will be published in an edited book in English from an International publishing house. The colloquium/one day international conference will be held online.

➔ Range of topics:

We are looking for submissions on a wide range of topics. Therefore, we welcome submissions aiming at discussing latest developments on the main subject of "New Trends in Media and Journalism", with a special emphasis upon this year's theme "Global Media models and emerging technology trends - AI, VR, Verification".

➔ Guidelines:

- Those interested in participating in the conference may submit their 300-word proposal and one-page Curriculum Vitae in a single PDF document to joursummerschool@gmail.com
- Please name your submission as the following: "Lastname_BriefTitle."
- Proposals must be received no longer than 5th of August in order to be considered.
- As the date approaches, additional information will be mailed to the participants and posted on our website.
- Accepted papers will be presented online, grouped by the topics examined, while in each group a faculty commentator will be appointed.

With your participation in THISAM, through the online presentation of your research, you seize the opportunity for your engagement with a major international forum, through analytical discussions with faculty, researchers and professionals from around the world, while becoming part of an active global network of like-minded and well-established colleagues.
